

Going to the Flynn's Art Gallery

Soon I will be going to visit an art exhibition at the Flynn! Besides the theaters where people see live performances, the Flynn also has an art gallery where artists can show paintings, drawings, and photographs. It is a place where people can come and look at the art.

This is the Amy E. Tarrant Gallery from outside

When I get to the gallery, I will see art on all the walls. All of the art will be large paintings by Anne Cady who lives in New Haven, VT.

There may be other people in the room. It might be crowded and noisy because many people want to see the art and want to talk about it with each other. When I am in the gallery, it's important that I try to follow the rules and expectations.

When I am in the gallery, I will try to:

- Use a quiet voice.
- Follow the directions from the people I came with or Flynn staff.
- Walk slowly so that I do not bump into other people.
- Not touch any of the art because the art can be damaged if people touch it.
- Not eat or drink.
- If I need to talk more loudly, have a snack or drink, if I need more space to move, I can ask the people I came with if we can take a break outside or in another quiet area of the Flynn.
- I can ask the people I came with or Flynn staff to use the iPod Shuffle to listen to soft music while I look at the art.
- If I need to go to the bathroom, I can ask the people I am with or Flynn staff. The bathrooms are very close to the gallery.

Anne Cady's colorful paintings are inspired by and pay homage to the beauty of the Vermont landscape that surrounds her. Her paintings are playful and bold, full of vibrant color and spirit.

Things I can look for in some of the paintings:

- Small barns hidden in the hills and valleys?
- Barns with red roofs?
- Barns with blue roofs?
- Can you find any roads in the paintings?
- What are the different colors of the trees?

It's ok if I don't understand everything happening in the image. If an image makes me feel uncomfortable, I can walk away and look at something else.

The Flynn gallery is a really cool place! The Flynn gallery is a place where I can see art and learn about artists. When I get home, I can draw pictures of what I saw in the gallery.

It will be a fun time since I know what to expect.
